Sherlock Holmes BBC is an adaptation on the classical theatrical style back in the 1800s. New modern technology was implemented in the show case of Sherlock's first episode "A study in pink", this title stating the case's aim. Through the use of a mobile phone, Sherlock and Watson has been able to ~~track down~~ decode "RACHEL", whom they all thought was a name but actually the password to ~~an app~~ location a tracking app.

The 2000's was an era for the advancement of technology, people around the globe has been immersed in these since the very beginning. When Sherlock, usually you would think it's set in ~~pre-historic~~ prehistoric times, the author modernized this show for the audience to embrace the use of technology and insert that into old shows/plays/books.
Another very good example of people modernising plays is from the 21st Romeo and Juliet using modern technology to appeal to audiences. Sherlock is a contemporary detective meaning he is adapted into a new society where everything is heavily reliant on technology.
